LEGAL RECOGNITION OF LGBT FAMILIES

I. Legal Parent

A legal parent is a person who is legally-recognized as a child's parent and has the legal right to have custody of a child and make decisions about the child's health, education, and well-being. A legal parent is also financially obligated to support the child.

In a number of states, a person who is not a legal parent does not have any legal decision-making authority over a child, even if that person lives with the child and functions as the child's parent. For example, in some states, a person who is not a legal parent may not be able to consent to medical care for the child or even have the authority to approve things like school field trips. In addition, a non-legal parent may have no rights to custody or even visitation with a child should something happen to the legal parent, and may have no ability to claim the child as a dependent for health insurance. In the absence of a will stating otherwise, a child generally has no right to inherit from a person who is not a legal parent or relative.

All legal parents have an equal right to seek custody and make decisions for their children, as well as the responsibility to support their children. A biological parent does not have any more rights than an adoptive parent or other person who is a legal parent. For example, if a lesbian couple has a child together through donor insemination and completes a second parent adoption, both parents are on completely equal legal footing. If the couple were to separate, each would be equally entitled to custody, which a court would determine based on the best interests of the child without giving an automatic advantage to either parent.

When a legally married couple has a child, they are both automatically presumed to be the legal parents of the child. This means that, if they get divorced, they both remain legal parents unless a court terminates one or both of their parental rights. This presumption applies to same-sex parents when children are born to couples who are married or where their state recognizes their civil union or comprehensive domestic partnership at the time the child is born. Regardless of whether you are married or in a civil union or comprehensive domestic partnership, NCLR always encourages non-biological and non-adoptive parents to get an adoption or parentage judgment, even if you are named on your child's birth certificate.

NCLR also always recommends that same-sex parents and transgender parents ensure that other family protection documents are in place, such as medical authorization, guardianship agreements, wills, advanced directives.

II. Second Parent Adoption

A. An Overview

The most common means by which LGBT non-biological parents establish a legal relationship with their children is through what is generally referred to as a “second parent adoption.” A second parent adoption is the legal procedure by which a co-parent adopts his or her partner’s child without terminating the partner’s parental rights, regardless of marital status. As a result of the adoption, the child has two legal parents, and both partners have equal legal status in terms of their relationship to the child.

Additionally, married same-sex couples can use the stepparent adoption procedures that other married couples may use. States that recognize comprehensive domestic partnerships or civil unions also allow couples joined in these legal unions to use the stepparent adoption procedures. These adoptions have the same effect as a second parent adoption, but they may be faster and less expensive than second parent adoptions, depending on where you live.

It is important to recognize, however, that a same-sex partner who plans the birth or adoption of a child with his or her partner is a parent – not a stepparent. Parents should not have to adopt their own children, but it is legally advisable for LGBT parents to get an adoption or parentage judgment to ensure that their parental rights are fully protected in every state.

B. Availability of Second Parent Adoption

As mentioned above, married same-sex couples can use the stepparent adoption procedures available to all married couples. Registered domestic partners or civil union partners can also use similar adoption procedures in states that recognize their relationship status.

In addition, for unmarried couples and couples who are not in a civil union or registered domestic partnership or similar status, a number of states allow them to get a second parent adoption. The following states have a state statute or appellate court decision allowing same-sex couples to get a second parent adoption or co-parent adoption: California<sup>1</sup>, Colorado<sup>2</sup>, Connecticut<sup>3</sup>, District of Columbia<sup>4</sup>, Idaho<sup>5</sup>, Illinois<sup>6</sup>, Indiana<sup>7</sup>, Maine<sup>8</sup>, Massachusetts<sup>9</sup>, New Jersey<sup>10</sup>, New York<sup>11</sup>, Oklahoma<sup>12</sup>, Pennsylvania<sup>13</sup>, Vermont<sup>14</sup>.

States that have allowed second parent adoptions by unmarried same-sex couples in some counties include Alaska, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Oregon, Rhode Island, Texas, Washington, and West Virginia. There undoubtedly are counties in other states that have granted second parent adoptions to unmarried same-sex couples.

Until recently, Florida was the only state to categorically prohibit lesbian, gay, and bisexual individuals from adopting, but that state law was held unconstitutional in September 2010.<sup>15</sup> Arkansas previously prohibited anyone cohabiting with an unmarried partner from adopting or being a foster parent, but the Arkansas Supreme Court struck down this statute as unconstitutional.<sup>16</sup>

Appellate courts in Alabama,<sup>17</sup> Kansas,<sup>18</sup> Kentucky,<sup>19</sup> North Carolina,<sup>20</sup> Nebraska,<sup>21</sup> Ohio,<sup>22</sup> and Wisconsin<sup>23</sup> have said that second parent adoptions are not permissible under the adoption statutes in those states either for same-sex or different-sex couples who are not married. However, married same-sex couples can use stepparent adoption procedures in those states.

Utah prohibits anyone cohabiting with an unmarried partner from adopting.<sup>24</sup> Utah also gives a preference to married couples over any single adult in adoptions or foster care placement.<sup>25</sup> Arizona gives a preference to married couples over a single adult in adoption placement.<sup>26</sup> Mississippi has a statute that prohibits “[a]doption by couples of the same gender,” but under the Supreme Court ruling, Mississippi must allow same-sex spouses to adopt on equal terms with other married couples.<sup>27</sup> Mississippi recently passed a law that may allow adoption service providers to refuse to place children with lesbian and gay single parents or couples if it would burden the exercise of their religion.<sup>28</sup> There is currently a case pending challenging Nebraska’s policy that excludes lesbian and gay parents from being foster or adoptive placements for children in state care.<sup>29</sup>

C. Recognition of Second Parent Adoptions

Adoptions are court orders, which all states are required by the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the federal Constitution to recognize. For this reason, a final adoption by an LGBT parent should be recognized in every state, even if that state’s own laws would not have allowed the adoption to take place. Many courts have recognized that adoption decrees are entitled to full faith and credit. For instance, in a 2009 decision, a Florida Court of Appeal held that Florida must recognize a second parent adoption granted to the biological mother’s same-sex partner in Washington, and that the adoptive parent is entitled to all the rights and responsibilities of a legal parent under Florida law.<sup>30</sup> Additionally, in 2002, the Nebraska Supreme Court said that Nebraska must recognize a second parent adoption granted in Pennsylvania, even though the adoption would not have been permitted in Nebraska.<sup>31</sup> The federal Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals invalidated an Oklahoma law that refused to recognize adoptions where there were two parents of the same gender, holding that the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the U.S. Constitution required Oklahoma to treat all adoptions in an “even-handed manner.”<sup>32</sup> The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, however, refused to allow same-sex parents to challenge Louisiana’s refusal to issue an amended birth certificate for a child adopted by a same-sex couple based on procedural issues, but explained that all states must recognize valid adoptions from other states.<sup>33</sup>

Courts have also recognized that, as a general rule, an adoption that has become final cannot be challenged later by one of the parties to the adoption. For example, the Iowa Supreme Court held that a parent who had consented to a second parent adoption years earlier could not later change her mind and seek to challenge the legality of the adoption.<sup>34</sup> Courts in a number of states, including appellate courts in Florida, Indiana, Kentucky, Minnesota, Texas, and Wisconsin have issued similar decisions.<sup>35</sup> The Texas court found that, in order to give children and adoptive parents finality and stability, Texas statutes prevented an adoption from being attacked for any reason more than six months after it was issued. In one case, the court noted: “The destruction of a parent-child relationship is a traumatic experience that can lead to emotional devastation for all the parties involved, and all reasonable efforts to prevent this outcome must be invoked when there is no indication that the destruction of the existing parent-child relationship is in the best interest of the child.”<sup>36</sup> Only one of the many states that has considered this issue, North Carolina, has invalidated a final adoption.<sup>37</sup>

III. Parentage Judgment

Adoption is currently the most common means used by LGBT non-biological parents to establish a legal parental relationship with their child. In many states, non-biological and non-adoptive parents who are recognized by their state law as legal parents also have the option of obtaining a parentage judgment. This is sometimes called a “parentage action,” “maternity action,” “paternity action,” or action under the state’s Uniform Parentage Act, known as a “UPA action.” It is extremely important for non-biological parents to get a parentage judgment or adoption as soon as possible to ensure that their parental rights will be fully respected in any state if you move or travel. Having your name on the birth certificate does not guarantee protections if your legal rights are challenged in court – only an adoption or parentage judgment can ensure that parental rights will be respected.

A number of states recognize that a non-biological and non-adoptive parent can be a legal parent in some circumstances, even if they are not married to the birth parent. California, New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas, and New Hampshire have appellate decisions recognizing that a woman who has lived with a child and held herself out as a parent can establish her legal parentage under their parentage codes.<sup>38</sup> Delaware recognizes a person who is a de facto parent as a legal parent under their parentage statutes.<sup>39</sup> In some states, where a female same-sex couple plans together to conceive and raise a child using a medical procedure to become pregnant, or where a male same-sex couple uses a surrogate to conceive and bear a child, the intended parents can petition the court to declare the non-biological parent to be a legal parent to the child.<sup>40</sup> Appellate courts in Illinois, and a trial court in New Jersey, have held that a woman who consents to her partner’s insemination can be a legal parent, even if she is not married to the birth mother,<sup>41</sup> and a few other states have statutes that explicitly provide that either a man or a woman who consents to another woman's insemination is a legal parent, regardless of marital status, including New Mexico, Nevada Washington, and the District of Columbia.<sup>42</sup>

Some states, including Indiana,<sup>43</sup> Maine,<sup>44</sup> Nebraska,<sup>45</sup> Pennsylvania,<sup>46</sup> and Washington,<sup>47</sup> have case law recognizing that a non-biological and non-adoptive parent can have all of the rights and responsibilities of parentage based on the following factors: her acceptance of the responsibilities of parentage, living with the child, the legal parent's fostering a parent-child relationship between the child and the non-biological and non-adoptive parent, and the existence of a bonded parent-child relationship.

Parentage judgments can also be obtained when a child is born to a couple who are married, or are in a state that recognizes their civil union or comprehensive domestic partnership. Transgender parents who are not biological parents can also obtain parentage judgments for children born to them and their spouse or partner if they are legally married or in a civil union or comprehensive domestic partnership.

For information about relationship recognition in your state, see NCLR's publication Marriage, Domestic Partnerships, and Civil Unions: An Overview of Relationship Recognition for Same-Sex Couples in the United States, available at www.nclrights.org.

IV. Custody/Visitation

Any legal parent has an equal right to seek custody or visitation, regardless of whether they are a biological parent, adoptive parent, or other legal parent. Between legal parents, there is no preference for biological parents in custody cases.

In addition to the states listed in the previous section that allow non-biological and non-adoptive parents to be recognized as legal parents, many states recognize that, where a same-sex partner participated in the caretaking of the child and maintained a parent-like relationship with the child, he or she has standing (meaning the right to go to court) to ask a court for visitation or custody. Such states have recognized this right to seek visitation or custody under an "equitable parent," "parent by estoppel," "de facto parent," "psychological parent," or "in loco parentis" theory. State courts that have recognized that a non-biological and non-adoptive parent may seek visitation or custody even if they are not a legal parent include: Alaska,<sup>48</sup> Arkansas,<sup>49</sup> Arizona,<sup>50</sup> Colorado,<sup>51</sup> Indiana,<sup>52</sup> Kentucky,<sup>53</sup> Maine,<sup>54</sup> Massachusetts,<sup>55</sup> Minnesota,<sup>56</sup> Mississippi,<sup>57</sup> Montana,<sup>58</sup> Nebraska,<sup>59</sup> New Jersey,<sup>60</sup> New Mexico,<sup>61</sup> North Carolina,<sup>62</sup> North Dakota,<sup>63</sup> Ohio,<sup>64</sup> Oklahoma,<sup>65</sup> Pennsylvania,<sup>66</sup> Rhode Island,<sup>67</sup> South Carolina,<sup>68</sup> Washington,<sup>69</sup> West Virginia,<sup>70</sup> and Wisconsin.<sup>71</sup> Only a small number of states have said that a non-legal parent has no ability to seek custody or visitation with the child of his or her former partner, even when he or she has been an equally contributing caretaker of the child.<sup>72</sup>

Many states have enacted statutes giving de facto parents or persons who have assumed a true parental role in a child's life a right to seek visitation or custody, including Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Minnesota, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, South Carolina, Texas, and the District of Columbia.<sup>73</sup> For example, the District of Columbia defines de facto parents as someone who has taken on the full responsibilities of a parent, held himself or herself out as the child's parent with the permission of the other parent or parents, and either (1) lived with the child since birth or adoption or (2) lived with the child for 10 months out of the last year and formed a "strong emotional bond" with the child with the encouragement of the other parent.<sup>74</sup>

V. Parenting Agreement

Same-sex couples who were not married when their children were born and who live in a state that does not yet permit second parent adoptions or parentage actions may want to draft a parenting agreement. This agreement will not make you a parent, but a number of courts have recognized that parenting agreements permitting another person to have custody or visitation with a child may be enforceable in court.<sup>75</sup> These courts have acknowledged the importance of protecting parent-child bonds that have formed with the agreement of the child's legal parent.

A parenting agreement should specify that, although only one of the parents may be recognized as a legal parent, both parents consider themselves to be the parents of their child, with all of the legal rights and responsibilities that come with being a parent. It should explain that the legal parent waives her exclusive right to custody and control of the child and intends to co-parent equally with the other parent. The agreement should include language that clearly states the couple's intention to continue to co-parent even if their relationship is dissolved.
